Thursday, November 5  8:00-10:00 p.m., Welker Room
Lenape Indian Tribe: The Role of Women in Native Society, Then & Now
This presentation will explore the achievements of native women through the eyes of a Native woman and a historian. It will discuss the role of Native American women in native life and their contributions. Early European writers often did not accept women in roles other than the ones allowed in their own culture. Reservation life forced men to abandon their traditional roles as hunters and warriors and to conform to European customs, leading them to usurp female roles. In contemporary Native American life, women’s accomplishments often are distorted or ignored. Throughout the program the audience will be enlightened with an accurate portrayal of Native American women.
